YOU need WeatherAction Forecasts!

UK & Ireland Floods warned by WeatherAction 5 weeks ahead

- AND Again WeatherAction correctly warned Met Office would under-estimate deluges in short range.
- Solar-based science can dramatically improve storm & flood warnings without a penny more being wasted on new super computers and outdated CO2 delusional 'science'.

Aurora 17-18 June, driven by solar activity, heralded WeatherAction's long range 'R5' Red Warning for ramping up storms & deluges around 19-21 June +/- 1 day. <http://bit.ly/NiJFBt>

WeatherAction long range forecast map issued 16 May for 18-21 June +/- 1 day. On 15 June WA further warned main rains would probably continue into 22nd.

Massive floods N England 22-23 June from rains 21-22. In the run-up MetO had to raise warnings from 1yellow to 2yell & 1Amber - confirming Weather-Action long range R5 warning of MO underestimation <http://bit.ly/McMGQr>

You need WeatherAction Forecasts! Great recommendation Thanks Craig!:-

On 27 Jun 2012, Craig M wrote: I have to say Piers how impressed I have been with your June forecast. It has been very tricky & some aspects have not been as forecast (the heat from SLAT 8) but with both the 30 & 45 day forecasts in hand I have had a perfect guide. Unlike many gardeners I have spoken to, I am not suffering from a loss of crops (late but not lost/heavily damaged). Despite the massive swings in temperature this year, I have made sure I focused on hardy plants & utilised any 'windows' to maximise. We can easily survive a Little Ice Age (LIA) but first you have to accept & work with the environment & climate you are in. Growing grapes based upon a 'modelled' climate rather than the one you are experiencing is daft. Blueberries, although not native are hardy. Nettles makes great green compost & always do well. This was the heart of the green movement which it forgot in the CO2 Inquisition. They need to get out in the garden more often & smell the roses

USA Forest Fires warned by WeatherAction 4 weeks ahead
